

Abstract

The invention relates to a method which is used to measure pressure in an area which is closed by an solenoid valve (106). Said method comprises the following steps: applying voltage to the solenoid valve (106), determining the peak of a curve of the flowing current based on voltage and determining the pressure based on determination of the peak of the curve.